Miracles: The Credibility of the New Testament Accounts ...

When it comes to the miracles contained in the NT accounts, scholars have been chronically skeptical of their veracity and credibility. Keener's work is designed to challenge that bias. His intent is not to prove the truth of the NT miracles, nor of modern ones, but simply to show that the accepted predisposition against the possibility of miracles is intellectually indefensible.

The Credibility of Jesus' Miracles. Craig Blomberg. Distinguished Professor of New Testament, Denver Seminary. For some people, the miracles in the Gospels form the most incredible part of the New Testament accounts. Modern science, they say, has demonstrated that the universe is a closed continuum of cause and effect.

The Credibility of Jesus' Miracles - Apologetics

"Western theology invariably asks the question: Are miracles possible? This of course addresses the Enlightenment problem of a closed universe. In much of Asia that is a non-question because the miraculous is assumed and fairly regularly experienced.—Hwa Yung" — Craig S. Keener, Miracles: The Credibility of the New Testament Accounts

Miracles: The Credibility of the New Testament Accounts

In Miracles: The Credibility of the New Testament Accounts, Craig S. Keener demonstrates that those who take their cues from David Hume and say miracles cannot happen are wrong, and then in a second step proceeds to show why they are wrong. And as Keener, a professor of New Testament at Asbury Theological Seminary, shows in great detail, the reasons are not pretty.

But inquiry into the credibility of specific miracle claims inevitably raises questions regarding the concept of a miracle, and arguments regarding particular claims cannot be evaluated until the nature of that concept has been at least reasonably clarified. 1.1 Miracles as events that exceed the productive power of nature

Miracles (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Miracles display God's actions. They defy the laws of nature, the laws of physics. It is something that only God can do. At the same time, we know there are religious con artists who work hard at fooling audiences into thinking something is a miracle, when it is in fact, just a well-performed illusion.
